

I like the concept of a la carte channels, but am not sure it would be financially viable. What I do think would work is to have a basic tier rate that does not include the sports networks which are the main force driving up cable rates. I do not watch any of the sports networks and am tired of my rates increasing so others can watch more sports. The sports networks should be separate premium pricing option for those subscribers wanting the sports package.